A lot of level-headed thinking went into enhancing the practical touches of this hatchback. Firstly, there is room for three in the back and the rear seats split and fold, extending the boot space to 615 litres. Secondly, you've got handy storage in the centre console, front door pockets and the glove box.

In a driver's car like the Satria Neo, the driving position is crucial. Race-inspired bucket seats are standard fit, and designed to hug you on the bends. The driver's seat is fully adjustable, giving you total control of the height, slide and tilt so that you can set it up perfectly.

Naturally the Satria Neo has power steering, but the steering column is also height adjustable. Climate control as standard, audio controls on the steering wheel, electric mirrors and parking sensors are just a few more touches that add finesse to the Satria Neo. There is also an automatic option with cruise control if you prefer.

The Satria Neo's audio system features the latest technology, letting you play your music in the format that suits you. The Blaupunkt radio/CD player is MP3 and CDRW capable, plus Bluetooth is available as an option. With four speakers in the cabin, the sound is simply superb.

The sporty exterior references are reiterated in the Satria Neo's interior, with the rivet finish on the petrol cap echoed on the steering wheel. The rev counter and speedo are dramatically framed under twin arches, and backlit in blue to create an eye-catching display. Add to this the carefully chosen fabrics and finishes and the Satria Neo has all-round appeal – inside and out.
